

D-Limonene

A Concentrated Orange Peel Extract for a More Natural Approach to Heartburn Support

We get a lot of calls requesting something for heartburn. There are many approaches to this problem but none of them have the advantages of d-Limonene, a natural extract of orange peels. Once we began to do our homework, all the sources began to lead in a single direction- to d-Limonene. The result of our labors became the product we call D-Limonene and we believe that you will be very impressed with it.

OK, but why d-Limonene? That's a great question. We'll start with what it is. It is an important compound in nature that many miss getting because we usually throw away the peels or rinds of citrus fruits. This is where d-Limonene is concentrated.

What does d-Limonene do, exactly? Well, the exact action of d-Limonene isn't really understood-YET. But clinical studies have shown that a very large percentage of study subjects heartburn and GERD (gastro-esophageal reflux disease) using d-Limonene daily (one study used d-Limonene every other day) for 14-30 days gave relief lasting from 2 weeks to more than 6 months after stopping the supplementation. That's pretty impressive. But it's not the only reason.

Some experience belching with the use of D-Limonene, but that's not necessarily a bad thing. Some research indicates that the belching action causes the d-Limonene, which floats on top of gastric juices, into the esophagus, coating it and protecting the tissue inflamed by reflux of the stomach acids.

It is also theorized that over time d-Limonene restricts the growth of the H. pylori bacteria that is theorized as one of the possible causes of gastric ulcer.

So if you're looking for a dietary supplement to support your body in relieving heartburn, why not give D-Limonene a try?
